A case carlonsly illustrative of these distinctions came, not long since, before the Divorce Court. In November, 180°, a wife had instituted a suit for a judicial separation on the ground of the husband's adultery, and in that suit she obtained a decree. In the course of last year she instituted a suit for the dis-solution of her marriage on the ground of cruelty committed by her husband p evious to the institution of the former suit, and of his subsequent adultery. Both the adultery and cruelty were proved, but it was grued by the Attorney General that the wife knowing of the cru-elty, and having failed to it-corporate it in the lirst suit, she was not now entitled to fall back upon it, and that she was not, in consequence, last year she instituted a suit for the disand that she was not, in consequence, entitled to a decree of dissolution. The wife's statement was, that when she instituted the first suit she did not wish a dissolution of her marriage; that she loved her husband, and in the hope that he would reform and amend his ways, she was anxious to leave the door open to enable him to return to her. The judge said that he considered the conduct of the wife of a very meri-torious character, and unless there was some general principle of law which stood between her and the relief she sought, he thought she was entitled to it. He could find no such principle in existence and he pronounced a decree uist in favor of the wife. A "decree
